WHO WE ARE

JFRF has tackled issues impacting elders living in poverty for nearly two decades. We are known for our dedication to improving living conditions for impoverished older adults. Our goal is to help bridge the gap for older adults, families and communities as we support strategies to address the changing face of aging.

OUR WORK CONTINUES

The North Carolina long-term care community began its relationship with the Jessie F. Richardson Foundation (JFRF) and the elders of Nicaragua in 2006. This long-standing partnership has had a tremendous impact on the lives of many elders living in the Hogar de Ancianos, or home of the elders, in Jinotepe and additional homes throughout Nicaragua. Many of our long-term care partners, including providers and vendors, have witnessed these remarkable results on the faces of hundreds of elders at the hogares and the staff who care for them.

Some of the things we have accomplished with the proceeds from this event are providing much-needed equipment, developing a pharmacy business, replacing water tanks, and building a national training center for eldercare—the only one of its kind in Central America.

Perhaps the most significant impact witnessed in Nicaragua, despite political unrest, COVID-19, and devastating natural disasters that hampered typical channels for donations and services, is that our capacity-building and community empowerment efforts worked! The elders continued to receive essential items like food, water, and medicine, and community members continued training to better care for the elders in hogares.

The impact of your contribution is seemingly limitless in the people it can reach. Please join us and keep this impact going.
